

Reading Group Gold

Being Mortal

Medicine and What Matters in the End

By Atul Gawande

Coast-to-Coast Praise for Being Mortal

“Beautifully crafted. . . . Being Mortal is a clear-eyed, informative exploration of what growing old means in the 21st century. . . . This should be mandatory reading for every American.”—TIME.com

“Atul Gawande’s masterful exploration of aging, death, and the medical profession’s mishandling of both, is his best and most personal book yet.”—The Boston Globe

“A needed call to action, a cautionary tale of what can go wrong . . . when a society fails to engage in a sustained discussion about aging and dying.”—San Francisco Chronicle

“Masterful. . . . Essential. . . . For more than a decade, Atul Gawande has explored the fault lines of medicine. . . . In Being Mortal, he turns his attention to his most important subject yet.”—Chicago Tribune

“American medicine, Being Mortal reminds us, has prepared itself for life but not for death. This is Atul Gawande’s most powerful—and moving—book.”—Malcolm Gladwell

Introduction

“I learned about a lot of things in medical school, but mortality wasn’t one of them,” Atul Gawande writes in the introduction to Being Mortal, his insightful, deeply moving exploration of how we confront—or fail to confront—the inevitability of aging and death. Sparking important dialogues about the limitations of modern medicine, Being Mortal raises the crucial questions we may struggle to discuss: What is the best way to care for our elders who develop disabilities but don’t want to give up their autonomy? If a loved one develops a serious, incurable illness, or we ourselves receive a challenging diagnosis, how can we balance quality of life with the quest to prolong it? And, ultimately, what are we sacrificing as a society when we entrust our sacred, final days to an industry?

Named a best book of the year by numerous outlets, including the Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal, NPR, the Chicago Tribune, The Economist, and Mother Jones, this provocative examination raises timely concerns about our purposes and priorities, in an age dominated by technology and medicine. Brimming with moving, real-world stories from all perspectives in the debate—doctors and patients, caregivers and administrators—including the difficult decisions Dr. Gawande’s own father faced, Being Mortal is a book that has inspired millions of vital discussions. Whether you read it with your book club or your family, we hope this guide will enhance your journey.

Questions and Topics for Discussion

1. Why do we assume we will know how to empathize and comfort those in end-of-life stages? How prepared do you feel to do and say the right thing when that time comes for someone in your life?
2. What do you think the author means when he says that we’ve “medicalized mortality”? How does The

Reading Group Gold

Death of Ivan Ilyich illustrate the suffering that can result? Have you ever witnessed such suffering?

3. As a child, what did you observe about the aging process? How was mortality discussed in your family? How do your family's lifespan stories compare to those in the book?

4. Have you ever seen anyone die? What was it like? How did the experience affect your wishes for the end of your own life?

5. What surprising facts did you discover about the physiology of aging? Did Dr. Gawande's descriptions of the body's natural transitions make you more or less determined to try to reverse the aging process?

6. Did you read Alice Hobson's story as an inspiring one, or as a cautionary tale?

7. Do you know couples like Felix and Bella? The last days for Bella were so hard on Felix, but do you think he'd have had it any other way? Was there anything more others could have done for this couple?

8. Chapter 4 describes the birth of the assisted-living facility concept (Park Place), designed by Keren Wilson to provide her disabled mother, Jessie, with caregivers who would not restrict her freedom. Key components included having her own thermostat, her own schedule, her own furniture, and a lock on the door. What does it mean to you to treat someone with serious infirmities as a person and not a patient?

9. What realities are captured in the story of Lou Sanders and his daughter, Shelley, regarding home care? What conflicts did Shelley face between her intentions and the practical needs of the family and herself? What does the book illustrate about the universal nature of this struggle in families around the globe?

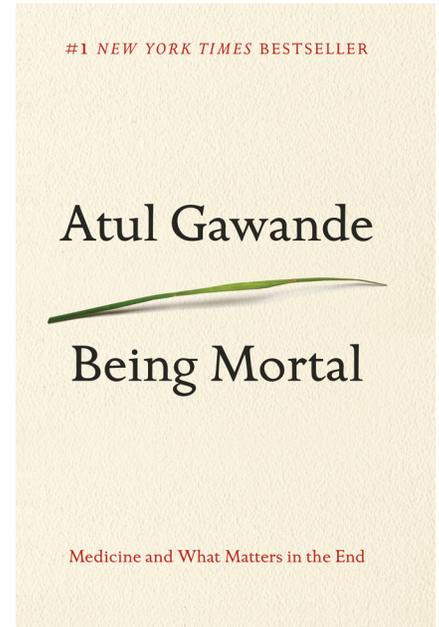

10. Reading about Bill Thomas's Eden Alternative in chapter 5, what came to mind when he outlined the Three Plagues of nursing home existence: boredom, loneliness, and helplessness? What do you think matters most when you envision eldercare?

11. How would you answer the question Gawande raises in chapter 6 regarding Sara Monopoli's final days: "What do we want Sara and her doctors to do now?"

12. The author writes, "It is not death that the very old tell me they fear. It is what happens short of death..." (55)

What do you fear most about the end of life? How do you think your family would react if you told them, "I'm ready"? How do we strike a balance between fear and hope, while still confronting reality?

13. In Josiah Royce's book, The Philosophy of Loyalty, he explores the reasons why just food, safety, shelter, etc. provide an empty existence. He concludes that we all need a cause beyond ourselves. Do you agree? What are your causes? Do you find them changing as you get older?

Reading Group Gold

14. Often medical treatments do not work. Yet our society seems to favor attempts to “fix” health problems, no matter the odds of their success. Dr. Gawande quotes statistics that show 25% of Medicare spending goes to the 5% of patients in the last stages of life. Why do you think it’s so difficult for doctors and/or families to refuse or curtail treatment? How should priorities be set?

15. What is your attitude, as you put it into practice, toward old age? Is it something to deny or avoid, or a stage of life to be honored? Do you think most people are in denial about their own aging?

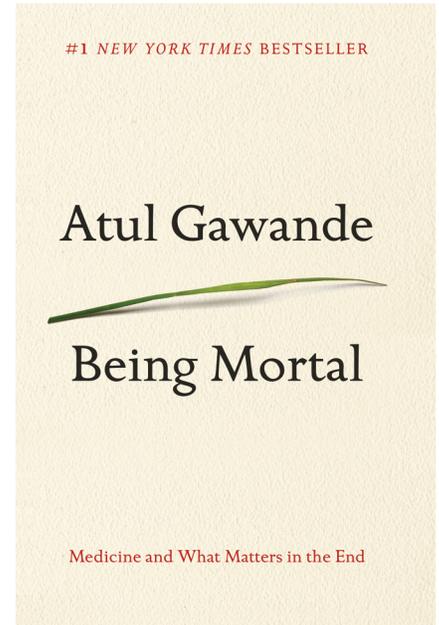

16. Discuss the often-politicized end-of-life questions raised in the closing chapters of Being Mortal. If you had to make a choice for a loved one between ICU and hospice, what would you most want to know from them? Susan Block’s father said he’d be willing to go through a lot as long as he was able to still “eat chocolate ice cream and watch football on television.” What would you be willing to endure and what would you not be willing to endure for the possibility of more time?

17. As the author learns the limitations of being Dr. Informative, how did your perception of doctors and what you want from them change? What would you want from your doctor if you faced a serious illness?

18. Doctors, and probably the rest of us, tend to define themselves by their successes, not their failures. Is this true in your life? At work, in your family, at whatever skills you have? Should we define ourselves more by our failures? Do you know people who define themselves by their failures? (Are they fun to be with?) How can doctors, and the rest of us, strike a balance?

19. In chapter 8, Dr. Gawande describes the choices made by his daughter’s piano teacher, Peg Bachelder. Her definition of a good day meant returning to teaching, culminating in two concerts performed by her students. If you were facing similar circumstances, what would your good day look like?

20. How was your reading affected by the book’s final scene, as Dr. Gawande fulfills his father’s wishes? How do tradition and spirituality influence your concept of what it means to be mortal?

About the Author

A surgeon at Brigham and Women’s Hospital in Boston, Atul Gawande is the award-winning author of three bestselling books: Complications, a finalist for the National Book Award; Better, selected by Amazon.com as one of the ten best books of 2007; and The Checklist Manifesto. He is the executive director of Ariadne Labs, a joint center for health systems innovation, and chairman of Lifebox, a nonprofit organization making surgery safer globally.

Guide written by Amy Clements